

Changing the game for endangered wild gorillas is a collaborative effort, with conservationists and environmentalists across the globe doing their part every single day to protect these amazing creatures.

My wife, Loti, and I are passionate about conservation, to say the least, and we try to do our part to protect and preserve the beautiful natural world around us.

One way we help change the game for gorillas and other endangered wildlife is by supporting the work of critical conservation organizations like the Dian Fossey Gorilla Fund.

Loti and I use my stone wildlife sculptures to raise awareness and funds for endangered animals throughout the world. In fact, we've made this our life's mission...

My sculptures are now on display at the North Carolina Zoo, The Woodson Museum, The Hiram Blauvelt Art Museum, and many others.

In fact, my gorilla sculpture, Enigma (above), was recently juried into the National Sculpture Society Show -- the most prestigious sculpture show in the country!

And yes, for those gorilla enthusiasts out there, Enigma is technically a western lowland gorilla, but I have plans to create a magnificent mountain gorilla, as well!

Because ALL species of gorilla are under threat of extinction, we want to do everything we can to bring attention to these incredible animals, that are so much like us.

Recently, Loti and I were honored to learn that Enigma won one of the top awards in the show! But it's even more of an honor for us to be able to donate the prize money from the sculpture to the Fossey Fund in support of their #GivingTuesday campaign.

There are a variety of ways to change the game for gorillas and other endangered species, and our challenge to you today is to consider the many ways YOU can become a game-changer for these magnificent animals, too.

Whether it's donating your birthday dollars, fundraising on behalf of the Fossey Fund, or promoting wildlife conservation through sculpture -- NEVER underestimate your ability to make an impact.
